

2055

Original title: 2055

For 40 years '2055' has lived in an institution that offers the possibility of living in isolation out of free will. One day he is surprised by a telephone repairman on the other side of the glass. After 40 years of isolation, how does '2055' react to a filtered human voice? Does he still have feelings when he looks into someone's eyes?
