

A Dog's Luck

Original title: Het geluk van honden

Several dogs are being trained as patrol dogs. Their owners teach them the choreographies of police work: biting and letting go, following and staying, always at their owner's command. Longingly gazing upwards, the dogs seem intimately connected with their trainers. They are tamed and domesticated; their life is directed by humans. At the same time they are always the elusive other in the gap that divides humans and animals.
