

Bare Handed

Original title: à Mains Nues

Bare Handed is a cinematographic and choreographic poem. Freely inspired by Joseph Noiret's text and his daughter Michèle's choreography, Bare-Handed is a film of uncommon beauty. In it, a woman's progress in the world unfolds step by step. Solitary bearer of multiple imaginings, she dances her worlds of memories, sensations, discoveries and rekindled emotions. With light and shadow as her partners, she approaches the world created by her dance, confronts and captures it. She immerses herself in this world and eventually loses herself in it. In this way the rhythm of dance joins the pleasure of pure cinema in fluid, dream-like harmony. Bare-Handed is an original work, created for the screen, not the documentation of a performance. This film features also the choreographer's father, the poet Joseph Noiret, co-founder of the famous artists' group Cobra.
