

East Shore

Original title: Oosteroever

East Shore is a short documentary portrait of Marnix Verleene, a fisherman in Ostend. The film takes place both on shore and at sea, sketching an image of the fishing district through a poetic glance at Marnix's life. The East Shore is the neighbourhood in which fishermen dwell: they weave nets, play cards and kill time. Now, this district is being demolished: high, white, residential blocks are rising up instead. East Shore reflects this fragmented composition in its form: on shore, Marnix's life is enacted in scenes by him and his co-workers; at sea we look more indirectly, through shadows, silhouettes and reflections at how life goes on.
