

Ming of Harlem – Twenty One Storeys in the Air

Original title: Ming of Harlem - Twenty One Storeys in the Air

Ming of Harlem: Twenty One Storeys in the Air is an only-in-New-York account of Ming, Al and Antoine Yates, who co-habited in a high-rise social housing apartment at the Drew-Hamilton complex in Harlem for several years until 2003, when news of their dwelling caused a public outcry and collective outpouring of disbelief. On the discovery that Ming was a 500-pound tiger and Al a seven-foot alligator, their story took on an astonishing dimension. The film frames Yates's recollections with a poetic study of Ming and Al, the predators' presence combined with a text by philosopher Jean-Luc Nancy, reimagining the circumstances of the wild inside, animal names, strange territories and human/animal relations.
