

My Paper Life

Original title: My Paper Life

Traumatised by her flight from war-torn Syria, Rima has difficulties in mastering French and integrating in Brussels. Together with the director, herself an Iranian immigrant, Rima expresses herself through drawings that come to life as stop-motion animations. These are intertwined with scenes of the family's daily life in the flat where they struggle with their surroundings. As Rima starts to integrate, she refuses to accept an arranged marriage. Tension arises and the director gets caught between her loyalty to the family and her conviction that every person should be free to decide their own fate. Will Rima find a way to combine tradition and modernity?
