

The Entrance

Original title: De intrede

"After having, for years, deciphered the wrinkled foreheads of the people on the sidewalks of Brussels, after having held daily conversations with himself, after having meticulously weighed and measured, throughout his young life, that which is good and that which is evil, he had made a decision. With no limits and in a generous gesture, he would become one with absolute goodness. His loved one brought him his horse. He made ready for his gracious entry into Brussels. She knew that he must do this alone. So she went and he gave and he endured."
