

The Good Life (A Guided Tour)

Original title: The Good Life (a guided tour)

In the background, technicians are installing a prestigious exhibition whilst a smartly dressed woman is guiding a group of people around a series of pristine white spaces, some of them filled with crates and wrapped-up paintings. Along the way, she not only comments on the art but also reveals the building to her audience from a unique perspective. Describing interiors, views and the city's vibrant opportunities, the woman turns out to be an estate agent who is selling an up-market architectural proposal and a lifestyle that grafts the 'value' of art onto its institutions. Moving through the labyrinthine building, she finds herself lost in narrow corridors and staircases. Meanwhile, the future development projects itself into the group's collective imagination, fed by the visionary architectural model on display.
